

Stakeholders and Sisters project workshop

“Are EU ports ready for alternative fuels?”

EU and IMO are strongly pushing the decarbonization of maritime sectors, setting ambitious emissions reduction targets and promoting technological R&D (also via several EU funded projects) to enable EU vessels to be soon fuelled by alternative fuels such as hydrogen, ammonia, methanol etc. Nevertheless, further to make EU vessels ready for alternative fuels, it is important to make EU ports ready as well from an infrastructure and regulatory points of view. As ports are ecosystem involving not only vessels and maritime operators, boosting decarbonization of EU ports via a proper “green fuel infrastructure” can be the entry point to facilitate EU port cities energy transition. Starting from ENGIMMONIA and SEANERGY EU Funded project experiences and presenting some EU lighthouse ports horizons, this workshop aims to collect feedback from relevant stakeholders in order to guide next steps of EU R&D and policy making.
